

20117
801.11(e)

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

March 9, 1999

[REDACTED]

VIA MESSENGER

01 21 6 - 111 111
RECEIVED
MAR 10 1999

Patrick Sharpe
Premerger Notification Office

Washington, D.C. 20580

Re: Whether Certain Escrowed Funds of a Venture Capital Fund Are Considered Assets of the Fund for HSR Filing Purposes

Dear Mr. Sharpe:

[REDACTED]

A group of limited partners are forming a new venture capital fund (the "Fund") ^{NOT} reportable which will engage in acquisitions. The Fund is its own parent entity (i.e., no limited partner has the right to receive 50% or more of the profits or of the proceeds upon dissolution), and represents no assets or regularly prepared balance sheet.

The Fund and Corporation A, a $100 million person, enter into an agreement to form a joint venture corporation, Newco. Under the agreement, the Fund will contribute in excess of $200 million to Newco, and will receive a majority interest. Corporation A will contribute the assets of one of its ongoing businesses to

[REDACTED]

[Redacted]

Patrick Sharpe
March 09, 1999
Page 2

Newco, and will receive cash (from the proceeds of new debt taken on by Newco and from the Fund's contribution) and a minority interest in the joint venture.

The Fund's contribution to Newco will not be paid directly by the Fund. Instead,

who does not control Fund beneficial owners of the escrow funds. On notice from the general partner of the Fund, money will be transferred from the escrow account directly to Newco in satisfaction of the Fund's obligation under the joint venture agreement. Any funds

I never flows through Fund even an instant

Call me

My question was whether the money deposited in the escrow account would be considered assets of the Fund, potentially making the Fund a $10 million person and triggering a filing requirement under section 801.40(b). My understanding of your response is that it would not. Please let me know as soon as possible if my understanding is not correct.

Thank you again for your attention to this matter.

[Redacted]

I think one question is not counted toward

cc: [Redacted]

as a result, you do not have a $10.0mm person and therefore, 801.40 does not apply.

*(RS) called [Redacted] 3/9/99
(RS) concurs
I concur*