1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 The Federal Trade Commission’s (“FTC”) motion to strike (“Motion”) must be denied because 3 the affirmative defenses at issue – laches, estoppel, and offset – are properly raised against the FTC and 4 are adequately pled. As many courts have noted, motions to strike are a disfavored tool. Shaterian v.
5 Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 829 F. Supp. 2d 873, 879 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (quoting Rosales v. Citibank Fed.
6 Sav. Bank, 133 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1180 (N.D. Cal. 2001). The FTC’s Motion reveals exactly why courts 7 express this sentiment.

8 First, the FTC argues that Defendants have not provided fair notice of their laches defense, and 9 fail to assert certain factual elements of the estoppel defense. The FTC is wrong on both counts.
10 Defendants’ Answer provides ample factual support for both defenses, and closely follows the level 11 detail provided by other defendants to FTC actions in the Northern District that have survived motions 12 to strike. In contrast, the cases cited by the FTC in the Motion involved affirmative defenses with no 13 factual support. Defendants have provided fair notice here, but even if this Court determines otherwise 14 the Court should grant Defendants leave to amend their Answer.

15 Second, the FTC argues that the defenses of laches, estoppel, and offset are “legally insufficient 16 and prejudicial.” That argument lacks any merit, and suggests that the FTC enjoys a unique status 17 stripping Defendants of affirmative defenses. In so arguing, the FTC ignores dozens of rulings from 18 across the United States denying motions to strike and permitting defendants to raise these exact 19 defenses against the FTC. The cases cited by the FTC are universally dissimilar or, alternatively, 20 support Defendants’ arguments.

21 For the reasons that follow, Defendants respectfully request that this Court deny the Motion.
22 The FTC clearly believes itself to be a privileged litigant, exempt from affirmative defenses and routine 23 procedural vehicles such as responding to discovery and retaining experts. All Defendants have asked 24 from the inception of this litigation is the opportunity to defend themselves in court. The FTC has taken 25 every step in their power to prevent that from happening and to unnecessarily increase litigation costs.
26 However, there is simply no legal authority that prevents Defendants from asserting these meritorious 27 affirmative defenses. Basic fairness and due process require they be allowed to do so.

28 ///

1 II. LEGAL STANDARD

2 Under Rule 12(f), “[a]ffirmative defenses will be stricken only when they are insufficient on the 3 face of the pleadings.” Williams v. Jader Fuel Co., 944 F.2d 1388, 1400 (7th Cir. 1991) (quotation and 4 citation omitted), emphasis added. “Motions to strike ‘are generally disfavored because they are often 5 used as a delaying tactic and because of the limited importance of pleadings in federal practice.’” 6 Shaterian, 829 F.Supp.2d at 879 (quoting Rosales, 133 F. Supp. 2d at 1180). Given the disfavored 7 status of Rule 12(f) motions, “‘courts often require a showing of prejudice by the moving party before 8 granting the requested relief.’” Sanchez v. City of Fresno, 914 F. Supp. 2d 1079, 1122 (E.D. Cal. 2012) 9 (quoting Cal. Dep’t of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc., 217 F. Supp. 2d 1028, 1033 (C.D.
10 Cal. 2002)). “If there is any doubt whether the portion to be stricken might bear on an issue in the 11 litigation, the court should deny the motion.” Holmes v. Elec. Document Processing, Inc., 966 F. Supp.
12 2d 925, 930 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (quoting Platte Anchor Bolt, Inc. v. IHI, Inc., 352 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1057 13 (N.D. Cal. 2004)).

14 III. THE DEFENSES OF LACHES AND ESTOPPEL ARE ADEQUATELY PLED.

15 Being subject to the rules of pleading, an affirmative defense must be pled in “short and plain 16 terms.” Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 8(b)(1)(A). The FTC suggests that Defendants must allege additional facts, 17 and do so with “sufficient particularity.” Motion, p. 2. That is not the correct standard. Defendants are 18 not required to aver allegations to establish a prima facie claim or defense. Boykin v. KeyCorp., 521 19 F.3d 202, 212 (2d Cir. 2008). Nor does Rule 8 require answers or complaints to state evidentiary facts.
20 Cromwell v. Deutsche Bank Nat’l Trust Co., No. C 11-2693 PJH, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8528, at *2 21 (N.D. Cal., Jan. 25, 2012) (“[s]pecific facts are unnecessary”). A defendant need only provide “fair 22 notice” to sufficiently plead affirmative defenses. Simmons v. Navajo Cty., Ariz., 609 F.3d 1011, 1023 23 (9th Cir. 2010); Wyshak v. City Nat’l Bank, 607 F.2d 824, 827 (9th Cir. 1979). Here, Defendants have 24 more than met this notice pleading standard, and the Court should reject the FTC’s suggestion of a 25 heightened pleading standard.

26 A. Defendants have Provided Fair Notice of their Laches Defense.

27 The FTC contends that Defendants have provided “no factual basis” for the defense of laches.
28 Motion, p. 3. The FTC is demonstrably wrong. Below is how Defendants pled their affirmative 1 defense of laches:

2 . . . Plaintiff delayed bringing any action despite having full knowledge of 3 the corporate actions of Defendants for over a year before bringing this 4 lawsuit. Specifically, Plaintiff refused to respond to a letter sent by 5 corporate Defendants on December 30, 2016 to the Chairwoman of 6 Plaintiff, Edith Ramirez, in which the Corporate Defendants sought 7 guidance from the FTC regarding their standard business practices, and 8 provided samples of their mailers and the scripts used by Account 9 Specialists. Plaintiff understood that it would be important to respond to 10 the letter because they had already opened an investigation into Corporate 11 Defendants. Despite that, Plaintiff sat silently and did not respond to the 12 letter at all. In addition, Plaintiff refused to file its lawsuit promptly after 13 Defendants first filed a lawsuit against Plaintiff on August 18, 2017 for 14 declaratory relief. Plaintiff was considering the filing of a lawsuit, as it sent a draft complaint to Defendants on October 3, 2017, yet waited over four months to file its Complaint in this action. Furthermore, Plaintiff engaged in an indiscriminate industry “sweep” that it described as “Game of Loans,” and only decided to sue Defendants after gross delay, prejudice to Defendants and in response to Defendants’ suit for declaratory relief. In short, it would be inequitable for Plaintiff to seek equitable relief, including an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, when it had full knowledge of Corporate Defendants business practices yet refused to provide any guidance about what it thought the Corporate Defendants were doing wrong or how such actions could be corrected, and refused to file any lawsuit.

15 Answer, ECF No. 162, ¶108 (emphasis added).

16 The FTC’s Motion ignores all of the actual facts alleged, which go far beyond simply alleging 17 the defense. The elements of laches are (1) an unreasonable delay by the plaintiff and (2) prejudice to 18 the plaintiff. Evergreen Safety Council v. RSA Network, Inc., 697 F.3d 1221, 1226 (9th Cir. 2012).
 19 Here, the asserted affirmative defense provides fair notice of each element.

20 The affirmative defense provides fair notice of delay on the part of the FTC. In characteristic 21 fashion, the FTC simply ignores the actual facts alleged. The FTC focuses on the allegations regarding 22 the delay in filing the lawsuit after it shared a draft complaint, but the Answer provides more detail.
 23 Specifically, the Answer sets forth that the FTC “refused to respond” to a December 2016 inquiry to the 24 Chairman of the FTC after the FTC had already opened an investigation into Defendants’ practices. See 25 Answer, ECF No. 162, ¶108. The Answer also references the prejudice suffered by Defendants who 26 could not modify their practices to meet the FTC’s unknowable standards. This level of specificity is at 27 least as great as that pled in the answer before Judge Griffith when he denied the FTC’s motion to strike 28 on the same defense. See FTC v. DirecTV, Inc., No. 15-cv-01129-HSG, 2015 WL 9268119 (N.D. Cal.

1 Dec. 21, 2015) (DirectTV I); Declaration of James Vorhis (“Vorhis Decl.”), ¶ 2, Exh. A [DirecTV 2 Answer].

3 Moreover, the FTC incorrectly argues that “Defendants here meet neither prong” as if 4 Defendants have the burden to prove their defenses now; but, that is not the question this Court must 5 address. Defendants do not need to prove

1 alleges that Plaintiffs have stopped their investigations multiple times, leading him to believe his actions 2 were not illegal. Thus, given the liberal construction owed to his pleadings, Defendant has sufficiently 3 pleaded his affirmative defense of estoppel, and the Court will not strike it.”); FTC v. U.S. Work 4 Alliance, Inc., 2009 WL 10669724, at *3 (N.D. Ga. Feb. 24, 2009); FTC v. Accusearch, Inc., No. 06-cv-5 105-D, 2007 WL 9709752, at *2 (D. Wyo. Mar. 28, 2007); FTC v. Magazine Solutions, LLC, No. 07-6 692, 2007 WL 2815695, at *1 (W.D. Pa. Sep. 25, 2007) (denying motion to strike estoppel defense 7 because the defense was not “redundant, insufficient or immaterial to the matters at issue”); FTC v.
 8 Stratford Career Institute, NO. 16-cv-371, 2016 WL 3769187, at *2-3 (N.D. Ohio July 15, 2016).

9 The court in FTC v. BF Labs Inc., No. 4:14-CV-00815-BCW, 2015 WL 12806580, (W.D. Mo.
 10 Aug. 28, 2015) aptly reasoned:

11 Regardless of the impact of these defenses on liability, the Court finds that 12 there are scenarios where this factual information may be relevant to the 13 appropriate remedy. Because the Court is reticent to strike even a 14 potentially marginal defense that causes no discernible prejudice to 15 Plaintiff, the Court declines to strike these defenses. Id. (explaining that 16 “the mere presence of redundant and immaterial matter not affecting the 17 substance of the lawsuit is insufficient grounds to strike a pleading”). Id.
 18 at *3. Denied MTS estoppel and laches (different defendants, same action 19 as above). The Court is not convinced that these defenses are universally inapplicable in FTC Act cases. See, e.g., Hang-Ups Art Enters., 1995 WL 914179 at *4 (declining to strike similar defense and explaining that “[t]he facts of the case should decide whether there has been affirmative misconduct by the government such that laches might apply”). Because factual scenarios may exist where the defenses might apply, the Court declines to strike these defenses before Defendants have the benefit of some discovery.

20 Id. at *3, emphasis added. Similarly, here, the Court should deny the FTC’s motion as to the estoppel 21 defense because this defense does not fail as a matter of law, and because the FTC has not even 22 attempted to argue any legitimate prejudice.

23 The cases cited by the FTC are easily distinguished. For example, the FTC relies on FTC v.
 24 Medlab, Inc., Case No. CV-08-0822-SI (N.D. Cal. July 22, 2008), for the purported proposition that 25 “District courts in this circuit have held that the estoppel defense may not be asserted against 26 sovereigns who act to protect the public welfare, such as the FTC.” Motion, p. 5. That is not at all 27 what the Medlab order states. It does not reference sovereign entities or the public welfare. Instead, 28 the order merely strikes the defense without any elaboration. See ECF 170-3 (Ortiz Declaration, Exh.

1 Second, and more important, offset is a valid affirmative defense to be raised against the FTC.
2 Numerous courts have denied motions to strike on the offset defense because it is not per se invalid 3 when raised against the FTC. See, e.g., FTC v. Bronson Partner, LLC, No. 3:04CV1866 SRU, 2006
4 WL 1973572006, at *1-2 (D. Conn., Jan. 25, 2006); FTC v. Affiliate Strategies, Inc., No. 09-4104-JAR, 5 2010 WL 11470103, at *13-14 (D. Kan. June 8, 2010); FTC v. BF Labs Inc., No. 4:14-CV-00815-BCW, 6 2015 WL 12806580, at *3 (W.D. Mo., Aug. 28, 2015). As the FTC knows, the defense of offset is 7 highly factual, and it cannot be summarily defeated on a motion to strike by citation to cases with no 8 factual similarity to this litigation. For example, the court in BF Labs Inc., declined to strike defendants' 9 offset defenses explaining that "there are scenarios where this factual information may be relevant to the 10 appropriate remedy. Because the Court is reticent to strike even a potentially marginal defense that 11 causes no discernible prejudice to Plaintiff, the Court declines to strike these defenses." Id. at *3; see 12 also Affiliate Strategies, Inc., 2010 WL 11470103 at *13-15 (declining to strike offset defense due to 13 limited case law on the subject and because the applicability of the defense was a question of fact).

14 Third, cases cited by the FTC should be disregarded. Again, the FTC seems to believe that 15 Defendants must have a trial-ready case during the pleading stage. Not so. The FTC fails to recognize a 16 critical distinction between the current case and those it cites. In each of those cases, defendants 17 proposed that equitable monetary relief be decreased by the value of the positive benefits received from 18 the product or services being sold. This case is entirely differently because the services consumers 19 purchased resulted in reduced student loan payments, thereby reducing the amount of consumer loss.

20 The FTC fails to cite any case that says Defendants may not raise offset as a defense against the 21 FTC in litigation. None of the cases cited by the FTC involved a product or service that would reduce 22 consumers' overall expenses such as is the case here. As one example, the FTC relies on FTC v.
23 Kuykendall, 371 F.3d 745, 766 (10th Cir. 2004). That case involved a company marketing magazine 24 sales. Id. at 749-750. After the FTC obtained a judgment, the defendant continued to engage in the 25 marketing of magazine sales. The FTC was forced to bring a contempt motion. In evaluating the issue 26 of the equitable damages, the Court expressly stated that "[t]o accurately calculate actual loss, the 27 defendants must be allowed to put forth evidence showing that certain amounts should offset the 28 sanctions assessed against them...[f]or instance, the defendants might be able to show that some 1 have to address this frivolous argument.

2 The affirmative defenses at issue in the Motion are valid, and Defendants must be permitted to 3 assert them just like any other litigant. The FTC attempts to play God when it states that “[a]n agency 4 charged with enforcement of an important regulatory scheme in the public interest, such as the FTC, 5 should not be thwarted or distracted by conclusory or improbable allegations.” It cites to purported 6 “broad, burdensome, and prejudicial” discovery to support that far-fetched notion.⁹ But it was the FTC 7 that sued Defendants as part of a nationwide “sweep.” It was the FTC that publicly acknowledged this 8 complaint to be part of that larger effort. Discovery narrowly tailored to terminology in the FTC’s own 9 press release is not “wasteful” or “prejudicial” – it should be expected. Also, more importantly, the 10 Court should consider only Defendants’ Answer when ruling on the Motion, not the FTC’s extraneous 11 submissions. See Williams, 944 F.2d at 1400.¹⁰

12 As the court noted in FTC v. U.S. Work Alliance, Inc.:

13 Despite the FTC's argument to the contrary, the effect of briefing and 14 ruling on these defenses was to raise several issues before they are 15 factually ripe and caused the Court to consider purely legal defenses 16 before the Defendants even attempt to utilize them. The Court is 17 essentially ruling in the dark on hypothetical legal defenses. The Court 18 further notes that in its experience almost every experienced civil litigant 19 will raise precisely these three affirmative defenses (mootness, laches, 20 estoppel) in their answer because failure to do so, even if the defense 21 likely lacks merit, may result in waiver. See

1 pleading. ~~D-2 De.R.C.~~ City of San Diego, 289 F.R.D. 604, 608 (S.D. Cal. 2013). If the Court is inclined to 2 grant the FTC's Motion and strike any of Defendants' affirmative defenses, Defendants respectfully 3 request that the Court do so without prejudice and grant leave to amend the Answer.

4 VIII. CONCLUSION

5 For the reasons above, this Court should deny the FTC's Motion and let this case proceed on 2 (e) 4 (a) 4 (c)
