Members of the U.S. Federal Trade Commission,

On behalf of the Coalition for a Secure & Transparent Internet (CSTI), we appreciate the U.S. Federal Trade Commission's (FTC) ongoing efforts to protect consumers and its open meeting to discuss Identify Theft and Available Resources for Consumers. CSTI believes that the restoration of WHOIS

We share the view of the NTIA, many other USG agencies, and global public safety advocates on the importance of restoring WHOIS access. We call on the FTC - through its role as part of the Government Advisory Committee, as well as independently - to work to restore access to WHOIS information to better protect consumers online.

Thank you for your consideration,

Coalition for a Secure & Transparent Internet (CSTI)

Two Questions:

1. More information on consumer recourse against web platforms, particularly those that involve issues of particularly private nature, such as dating applications. How does the commission see blanket binding arbitration clauses?
 2. The FTC is in charge of setting up the HISA (horse racing). But there is a pending lawsuit against its constitutionality. Could the commission comment on how they see these issues going forward?

Despite this informed guidance, since the enactment of ICANN's policy to redact WHOIS data, law enforcement efforts with respect to online illegal activity—including identity theft—have been hampered and online illegal activity has increased. A survey conducted by the Public Safety Working
